Psychiatric Disorders

Psychiatric Disorders are usually based on complaints you have made to a doctor, where little "objective" medical evidence is available. The greatest difficulty with legal cases involving these illnesses is establishing your credibility with insurers and their lawyers who firstly do not accept this diagnosis, and secondly, do not believe that such conditions are real. In addition, in the context of disability claims, there is the difficulty of convincing the insurer that the condition is disabling.

At Share Lawyers we have extensive experience in handling cases involving individuals who have been diagnosed with Psychiatric Disorders. We understand the patience and compassion that is needed to handle such a case, together with the need for sound legal advice. When you are suffering from these symptoms you are not at your best, and need the steady, compassionate advice of experienced lawyers to assist you in navigating your way to fair and equitable resolution of your claim.

We would encourage you to contact us to consult further about your claim, to see if we can be of assistance to you and your family.

There are time limits to all claims and any delay in proceeding may be subject to a deadline so you should not delay in proceeding with your claim or obtaining legal advice to clarify these deadlines.
