Aaron Hall is a civil litigation lawyer located in Minneapolis, Minnesota. He is experienced in dealing with a variety of civil litigation disputes including issues such as breach of contract, torts and damages, product liabilities, and landlord and tenant disputes.

Should I Hire a Litigation Attorney?

Civil law defines civil litigation as a legal dispute between two or more parties seeking specific performance rather than criminal sanctions against the opposing party. Such branches of civil law usually involves money damages or claims for money and generally requires a full-blown trial should mediation or arbitration in the pre-litigation stage fail to resolve the controversy. Minnesota lawyers experience their fair share of litigating civil suits, the most common of which are disputes involving accidents, breach of contract, landlords and tenants, employment and labor, and product liability.

The work of a civil litigation attorney is both diverse and demanding. Earnest efforts must be exercised to arrive at reasonable compromises before actually contemplating a jury trial. Since civil litigation is adversarial in nature, legal issues must necessarily be ironed out and assertive legal action must be taken.
