College Savings Plan

In today’s increasingly competitive job market, a college degree is absolutely essential in order to obtain a well-paying, respectable job that offers chances of further advancement. College graduates, on average, make about 74 percent more than high school graduates annually. Going to college also allows you to pursue your interests, increase your knowledge in a particular field and develop the skills required to succeed in the workplace. Simply put, investing in a higher education is investing a better future for yourself or your kids. In the past decade or so, however, the average tuition costs at public institutions have gone up by nearly 51 percent. These costs will continue to rise, and the turbulent economy isn’t helping anyone either.
